

THE STORY PROJECT IN SHORT

Now that the fight against the corona virus is finally improving, there is slowly more insight into the consequences of Covid-19 crisis. The pandemic has had a major impact on many groups, both economically and socially. For example, many elderly people are known to struggle with loneliness. For young people – already referred to as the 'lockdown generation' – the negative consequences are likely to last even longer. The Learning from Community Stories Project or shortly called The Story Project is set up to give young people a voice in future decision-making and enable them to be part of the solution. In the coming two years partners from four European countries - The Netherlands, Ireland, Italy and Spain will gather their efforts together to develop a model and a series of creative workshops based on storytelling to help young people become more resilient and enhance their intercultural competences and creative potential.

PARTNER MEETING

The partners held in June an online meeting to set up the ambitious project targets and agree on current activities and tasks.

WHAT'S NEXT ON THE STORY PROJECT

- establish a network of associated partners and involve them in project activities
- create a structure and guidelines for organizing 'Storytellers' league' workshops based on a drama for change model
- pilot "Storytellers' league" workshops in The Netherlands, Ireland, Italy and Spain
- hold next project meeting face-to-face during the Dublin festival in October
